From [illegible]

THOMAS PAINE.

CONTINUED.

"I have no occasion," says Mr. Paine, "to ask and do not mean to accept "any place, or office, in the govern- "ment."—— The public have nothing to do with all this—"I have an establish- "ed fame in the literary world." Has Mr. Paine buried his trumpeter, so that he finds it necessary to blow the horn himself?—"I shall continue these letters, "as I see occasion" [after such a sample, sir, as the present, the world can, without impatience, await your leisure]; "and as "to the low party prints that chuse to "abuse me, they are welcome. I shall not "descend to answer them. I have been "too much accustomed to such common "stuff to take any notice of them."

It is hard to see what greater abuse any printer can give Mr. Paine than what he has himself bestowed upon one half, or at least one third part of the people of this country. His important approach has struck them, it seems, with a kind of hydrophobia. The maddest of Duane's reveries, when he prates about his elevated ground, is decency and moderation when compared with such matchless' insolence. Even Ajax, Homer's favorite model of of arrogance and ferocity, when he is to accept the challenge of Hector, delivers himself in a stile which contrasted (for it cannot be compared) with that of Mr. Paine is the stile of a gentleman. If Mr. Paine fancies that this is the way to gain prosyletes, he is an old man, without the "benefit of experience." * If he conceits "that his arrival has struck any party, or any man with terror, I trust the spirit of the country will convince him he is mistaken. Powerful and formidable as Mr. Paine is, he should not expect that five millions of people are prepared to fall on their knees before him. He should not expect that men, who, in every thing but abilities, are at least his equals, will be the more disposed to adopt his opinion, because he tells them that his approach has scared them out of their senses, because he tells them that they are gnashing their teeth; because he compares them to the most hideous and horrible object in the whole range of animated nature. If you wish to convince a person of the purity of your principles, and the correctness of your arguments, you do not begin by tweaking his nose, and spitting in his face. And yet he would regard even that treatment as respectful, in comparison with the metaphor, which Mr. Paine has cast in the faces of the people of America. I do not exaggerate. You have his language at full length. There is no garbled or crippled quotation. Mr. Paine has left no motive, no room, no possibility to exaggerate the insolence of his conduct. And so every man, who does not approve of the whole measures of Mr Jefferson, is to be compared with A MAD DOG! One is ashamed to reprint such despicable insults, or to employ such epithets of abhorrence, as they would be found to justify. As Ford says in the play, "Amaimon sounds "well; Barbason sounds well; yet they "are devils' additions. But——Cuc- "kold! Cuckold! Cuckold! The "devil himself has not such a nickname." "This nickname is infinitely more respectful than that which Mr. Paine has bestowed upon a very numerous portion of people at least as good as himself. Such is the chosen vessel of our beloved president! He sends twelve hundred leagues for an auxiliary writer, to tell his adversaries that they are mad dogs! All the wretched Jefferson newspapers republish this precious letter; and some of them preface it with rhapsodies of admiration.

The letter concludes in these words. "The government of England honored "me with a thousand matyrdoms, by burn- "ing me in effigy in every town in that "country; and their hirlings in Ameri- "ca may do the same." The government of England never burnt Mr. Paine's effigy; and they will never hire any body to burn it in America. It was burnt in some places, by the mob; but these people can no more be confounded with the British government, than Mr. Paine's proposed national convention with a British parliament. There is no mark of sense in those challenges. Without the wanton invitation of insult, Mr. Paine is already as much detested as a wise man can wish to be.

* Junius.

[illegible] letter is interspersed with [illegible] rofessions of attachment to the [illegible]es. About the year 1790, [illegible] gentleman, who now resides in Norfolk, and who told me the circumstance, was introduced to Mr. Paine at London, in a house in Bloomsbury square. Mr. Paine spoke in the rudest and most contemptuous terms both of the people of America and of the country. He was talking with much emphasis of some noblemen, who had taken notice of him.—He charged the Americans with ingratitude to himself. It does not appear that this charge had an honest foundation.—During the war, Mr. Paine was appointed secretary to congress, for foreign affairs. This was certainly a very high mark of confidence. After the war, Congress gave him three thousand dollars, and the state of Pennsylvania gave him a present of five hundred pounds. The states of New-York and New-Jersey, gave him also compensation. Mr. Paine was thus very handsomely rewarded. He was at the same time, caressed and trusted by some of the first people of the continent. He had no title to complain of American ingratitude. He left this country. He soon after learned, as he says, that the principles of liberty were expiring. It was his duty to have returned to that country for which he professes so much attachment to give battle to the sedition act. Instead of this, he continued in Europe for almost fifteen years. He suffered those expiring principles to fight their own way. If they were prevented from expiring, no thanks for their preservation are due to Mr. Paine. If he could have found a proper footing either in France, or England, we should not have heard any more about him.

Mr. Paine speaks of newspapers with contempt. At the same time he chuses that channel for addressing the public.—He despises writers that are abusive. At the same time, he becomes as abusive as the worst of them. He brags of his attachment to America, yet he confesses an absence of no less than thirteen years, after he had heard of her danger. He did not return at all, till he considered the danger over. He arrives, and in ten days he obtains complete information upon the spot. He tells one half of the people of this country that he has frightened them out of their senses. To the whole community he addresses himself in the tone of a pedagogue shaking his birch. He forgets that, during an absence of fifteen years, his place has been supplied; that our business can be done without him; that, in seventy six, the American press was in the baby cloaths of infancy, that it has since grown up to the maturity of manhood.

When it was first reported that Mr. Jefferson had invited Mr. Paine to return to the United States, the writer of these remarks set it down as federal calumny. Mr. Jefferson had witnessed the unspeakable mischief that resulted to his party from Bache's publication of the Age of Reason. He knew that suspicions of atheism had been attached to himself. I seemed, therefore, incredible that the president with his eyes open should walk into such a gulf of reproach, as the invitation of Mr. Paine to return to this country. He could not have taken a longer step to destruction; and it is amazing that Mr. Jefferson did not foresee this simple and obvious fact. Voltaire, Gibbon and the King of Prussia, and many other celebrated writers have attacked the christian religion. But their publications bear no more likeness to the insolent blackguardism of Mr. Paine than Gallatin bears to the Duke of Sully, or Giles and Madison to the ancient Scipios. These expressions may not be considered as uncandid or unjust, here follows some specimens of Mr. Paine's Age of Reason.—They are not selected as worse, or better than a thousand others. The second part is more generally indecent than the first; and as Mr. Paine says in this letter that "he had some manuscript works to publish," the natural inference is that the third part will be still more indecent than the second. He had promised to write an answer to bishop Watson, and another to Mr. Erskine, who pled against the London bookseller, that was prosecuted for printing the Age of Reason. There is much reason to believe that these two pieces form a part of Mr. Paine's budget. Here follows extracts:

Speaking of Isaiah's prophecy of the incarnation of our Savior, "Behold! a virgin shall conceive and bear a son," &c. Mr. Paine remarks:

"It certainly was not a difficult thing in any time of the world to find a girl with child, or to make her so; and perhaps Isaiah knew of one before hand; for I do not suppose that the prophets of that day were any more to be trusted than the priests of this."

"The fable of Jesus Christ, taking it as it is told, is blasphemously obscene. It gives an account of a young woman engaged to be married, and while under this engagement, she is, to speak plain language, debauched by a ghost."

Speaking of the resurrection of saints, at the crucifixion, Paine says:

"Matthew should have told us whether they came out naked and all in natural buff, he saints and she saints, or whether they came full dressed, and where they got their dresses; whether they went to their former habitations and reclaimed their wives, their husbands and their property, and how they were received; whether they entered ejectment for the recovery of their possessions, or brought actions of crim. con. against the rival interlopers; whether they remained on earth, and followed their former occupations of preaching or working, or whether they died again, or went back to their graves and buried themselves."

LITERARY FAIR.

On Monday was held, at the Franklin hotel, the first meeting of the second Literary Fair; at which attended some of the booksellers from N. York and Baltimore, besides those residing in Philadelphia belonging to the association. A Constitution was reported by the Company appointed in New-York, which after being debated on, was agreed to.

The association then proceeded to the choice of officers, when it appeared that Mathew Carey was chosen president Samuel Campbell, vice president, and S. F. Bradford, secretary.

It is confidently believed that the sanguine expectation formed by anticipation of the success of this institution, will be fully realized.

The Fair will probably continue for two weeks. Such Bookfellers residing in New-York, Baltimore, Alexandria, &c. &c. as can make it convenient, are expected to attend the meetings of the association which will be held twice a day, during the continuance of the Fair.

Foreign News.

We are very much indebted to the courtesy of the gentleman who this morning handed us some London papers, whose dates extend to the Twenty third of December; one day later than has been received elsewhere; it is from the last one that the extracts of this evening are taken.

The complexion of European politics seem strongly to confirm the predications of those, who very early declared, that the peace lately agreed upon would not be permanent. The protracted negociations at Ameins were a certain evidence of stubborn objections on the part of some of the the powers to the terms of the Preliminaries. The delay and difficulties that have since occured in the execution of several articles of the definitive treaty, bespeaks in a language not to be misunderstood, that if they are finally complied with, it will not be without the most sullen reluctance.

ENGLAND is sending our cloathing and stores for her army at Malta; the officers belonging to the troops there, and who are absent, are directed immediately to join the regiments in that Island, and the Mediterranean fleet are ordered to rendezvous in the harbor of La Vallette. From these measures it is pretty plainly inferable that the administration have no thoughts of evacuating that place for the present.—Whether the rumour, very currently in circulation that the Dey of Algiers has ceded to the French two ports in the neighbourhood of that city, has determined the English to keep possession of Malta as a counterpoise to these new acquisitions of her rival; or whether it is to be retained as a pledge till the indemnities are finally settled or whether it is a precautionary measure preceding the renewal of open hostilities every one will form their own conjectures. Certain it is, that a variety of circumstances tend strongly towards the latter conclusion. The unknown embassy of Mr. Moore; the affairs of Switzerland in which it is confidently affirmed the English cabinet have interfered; the cutters which are daily sailing with secret dispatches; the orders given to get the men of war at Plymouth ready for sea, provided with four months stores and provisions, all have an appearance unfriendly to the continuance of peace. Reports are also prevailing that Mr. Pitt is again to return to the administration, under a coalition with the Grenvilles': these are however quite contradictory, and we rather incline to the opinion that Mr. Pitt will not resume the ministerial functions, except in the event of war. Should that take place, there can be but little doubt but Mr. Pitt would again willingly become the director of the national energies, as it would again afford him the chance of gratifying the favorite wish of his heart—the demolition of the present government of France, and the restoration of the Bourbons to the usurped throne of their family.

Some occurrences in the North seem to correspond with the appearances we have noticed in England. The Emperor Alexander does not regard his new ally Bonaparte with his accustomed complacency; he begins to perceive that the Emperor of Germany is not quite so unreasonable on the subject of the indemnities as he at first apprehended; he has, in fact, lately discovered that there is much force and justice in his pretensions; a change in the Russian ministry has accordingly taken place, to facilitate the views of the Emperor. Count Alexander Woronzo, a brother of the Russian ambassador at London, has been made grand chancellor and principal director of foreign affairs. Since this alteration the Austrian minister count Surau has received a very marked degree of favor and attention—civilities to which he had before been unaccustomed. The probability, therefore is, that the courts of St. James and Petersburgh perfectly understand each other, and are prepared to act in concert.

Nothing final has yet taken place at Ratisbon. The Batavian Mail, which arrived at London on the 23d Oct. brought the latest intelligence from that place. By this, it appears that a new plan of indemnities had been offered to the diet, making several territorial arrangements, different from those in the old one. Ratisbon and Wetzlaer are to be given up to the Elector of Mentz, and several new members are to be added to the College of the Prince. It is also stated that this settlement will be guaranteed by France, Russia and Prussia, and that it was expected it would be agreed to by his Imperial Majesty.

The Diet at Schwartz have sent a deputation to Bonaparte; their treatment will probably be similar to that of Mr. Markow. Submission absolute and unqualified to him who aspires to be the RULER OF EUROPE, will alone gratify his pride and avert his vengeance.

The Legislature of Vermont, in order to encourage the militia to equip themselves, have passed a law, enabling the soldier on presenting a certificate from his commanding officer, of his being duly equipped, to have 45l. struck from the list of his rateable, estate, if amounting to that sum, and to an exemption from state taxes, if his list is not to that amount.

Duane and Smith, jacobin editors, and the friends of Tom Paine, are all at once mighty delicate about publishing parts of his letters on the subject of religion. The reason is, they know that on that point, in truth, and the minds of the American people, he, as the reviler of his maker, and the holy scriptures, is extremely vulnerable.

This blasphemer and deist has lately in some degree changed his notes, & speaks of his preservation by Providence. This however is no doubt intended by way of ridicule, but if otherwise, he may have a ready answer. He can be told where Providence made use of an infidel as an instrument to punish a chosen people.

If Paine wishes to maintain any kind of credit with the well informed part of the American community, at the present day, he ought at the opening of his campaign (and for that purpose it is opened, or he invited over here, unless to assist in disturbing the peace & quiet of the country, we are at a loss to say) he ought to pay some regard to truth, at least on points where he can be so easily refuted. To follow him and his friend Dallas through all their misrepresentations in their late addresses, would be a work of time and labor. One thing however which Paine asserts in his third letter published in Duane's paper of Friday, is an infamous falsehood. He says that general Washington received from the U. States, a donation of one hundred thousand acres of land.

It is well known that general Washington made it a condition not to accept of any compensation, and that he never did receive the value of a single cent for all his services: whereas T. Paine accepted valuable donations from several of the states, and was never satisfied.

(Gaz. U. S.)

The virtuous and pious editor of the Aurora has refused to publish a part of Paine's third letter, because he [Duane] "considers the prejudices of Pagan, Christian, or Jewish faith as subjects too delicate and serious to be taken up"; and because he "asserts for the religious man the same toleration, which he is bound to give to those who worship "Diana at Ephesus,' or 'Dagon on the Ganges,' or he who believes with Plato in one unknown God."

The part of the letter here referred to, will probably never meet the public eye, as the editors both of the Aurora and National Intelligencer have refused, or neglected to publish it, on account of its anti-religious tendency.

What may be the nature and extent of the observations which have been suppressed, it is not our wish to know or divine. But, from the terms in which they are mentioned in the Aurora, we are led to conclude, that they are too grossly blasphemous for publication. Indeed, this conclusion is unavoidable when it is considered, that they were denied admission into the paper of an editor who professes to rank all systems of faith on the same level, and to consider the belief and devotion of the christian as no better than prejudices for the Pagan or Jewish mytheology.

A PROPOSAL
BY SAMUEL BISHOP
For publishing by Subscription,
LETTERS ON THE Elementary Principles
OF EDUCATION.

By Elizabeth Hamilton,
Author of the "Memoirs of Modern Philosophers," &c.

ON this interesting and highly important branch of science, several valuable works have within a few years, been presented to the public, among which the above, as it is the most recent, so is it pre-eminently useful. Led by her subject into an inquiry concerning the nature of the active powers, and intellectual faculties of the human mind, Mrs. Hamilton has developed those powers and faculties with a perspicuity and ability which, while it arrests the attention of those who have most successfully studied those subjects, must render a competent knowledge of them familiar to the most ordinary capacity. The superficiness and frivolity of character engendered by the modern system of education, have been long, and justly, a subject of complaint; but the particular causes by which these serious evils have been produced, were hitherto but imperfectly known, or little attended to: To trace these evils to their source, and to point out the proper remedy, is the ultimate object to which the meritorious efforts of this Author have been directed; and in these efforts she has, it is believed, succeeded beyond the most sanguine expectations. Such indeed, is the importance of the inquiries which form the subject of this work, and so great the success with which those inquiries have been pursued, that the happiest consequences to society may reasonably be expected to result from the present publication. To all it is interesting in a very high degree, but to mothers of families, and others engaged in the formation of the minds of children and youth, it will prove an acquisition truly invaluable.

The rapid sale of two impressions of this work in England, sufficiently evinces the high estimation in which it is there held: An American edition—equal to, and at little more than half the price of the British edition*—is now offered to the patronage of the American public; by whose merits will, doubtless, be justly appreciated.

[An Extract from the above Work.]

"From most of the writers on education it "would appear, that it is only to people of rank "and fortune that education is a matter of any "importance. By such alone can the systems "that are generally proposed, be adopted. To "such, therefore, must we believe them to be "exclusively addressed. To make fine ladies "and finished gentlemen forms no part of my "plan, which has for its object the subjection of "the passions, the direction of the affections and "the cultivation of the faculties that are common "to the whole human race."

* The price of the British edition, is fifteen shillings, sterling, in boards.

CONDITIONS.

I. The Work shall be comprised in two Duodecimo volumes, of about 450 pages each, & shall be printed in the best manner, on a fine Paper, and new Type.

II. The price will be one Dollar per volume in boards, payable on delivery.

 A very considerable number of Copies being already subscribed for, the work shall be put to Press, and finished without delay.
